you're reading now. My intention was to hand this site over to another webmaster, and focus my attention full time (rather than just 95% of the time) on Project Camelot, which supports disclosure and which publishes interviews, free of charge, with insiders and other important witnesses to government secrecy.

I withheld posting it then because there was reason to hold the possibility that at least some of the insiders who were part of the backstage story might be present at the 2007 Laughlin UFO Congress. However, this has just concluded, and no-one was there – with one exception. This was an elderly man, with aquiline features and wearing a pilot's jacket... who, to my great interest, was clearly shocked to see me there again.

I'd met him at last year's Congress, and had been told then that he was Paul McGovern (a retired DIA official well-known in insider UFO circles), attending under a pseudonym. Last year this man had indeed shown an uncommon interest in me and, after the Congress was over, I'd been told he had passed on the message to me, via an intermediary, to ask whether or not I had "bought his story".

This year, on seeing him again, I confronted him; but he earned his paycheck by denying complicity to the bitter end. Eventually I left him alone, seeing that no further progress would be gained. Having analyzed all the available photographs, I don't believe he was Paul McGovern, but I do believe he's a DIA agent. That should be no surprise, as agents frequently patrol UFO conventions. But this, too, merely adds to the smoke and mirrors of the ongoing Serpo intrigue. As ever, nothing definitive transpired.

Meanwhile, and hinting strongly at a great deal more substance, I had told the story in our 17th February Coast to Coast AM radio interview of how Kerry Cassidy and I had made contact with an elderly man who we'd been told, off the record, was a reserve Serpo astronaut who had trained with the team who went on the mission. The full story follows here, and makes for fascinating reading. (Readers may be interested to know that the identity of the senior CIA agent who contacted us in irritation, unnamed below, can be deduced from reading Dan Smith's blog with some care and attention. The agent is identified there as "SI", an acronym for Salmo Irideus, or Troutfish.)

While intending no harm or discourtesy, and definitely with no intention to betray confidentiality, we had evidently trodden on the toes of both the DIA and CIA, as no-one had imagined that we would be actually take it upon ourselves to contact the person now known in Serpo lore as 'the old man'. This is what had happened:

I was told the name of someone who was supposedly a reserve Serpo astronaut, as far back as February 2006. This occurred naturally in conversation with a member of the intelligence community. I was also told the general area where this person lived.

A couple of months later, on 21 April, Kerry Cassidy and I opted to take a little initiative of our own. We did a search on the internet and found his name, together with a street address and telephone number. So we decided to write to him.

The letter was sent by FedEx. It expressed support, promised that his ID and contact details would not be revealed to anyone, said that we'd be delighted to assist with the disclosure effort with a Project Camelot interview under any stipulated conditions of confidentiality, and sought to establish direct communication if at all possible.

The letter was delivered and signed for, but after that there was silence. He never responded. We came to suspect that we'd written to the wrong person, and it was all a mistake.

Then, out of the blue, on 8 September, I received an e-mail from  (not marked Private) saying:

Did you go to [] to see Mr. [] with your girlfriend and a camera?

Where did you get his name and address?

We thought: "Thank you, ." Beautiful confirmation. That was a slip on 's part.

The distortion in 's belief about what had happened (and the time delay – four and a half months) made us wonder if this had been reported up the line through the DIA, across to the CIA at a high level, and then down to  , accumulating errors along the way. (We'll leave others to determine the likelihood of  still being on the CIA payroll.)

I did not reply to 's question (hoping he would say more) - and he did.

On 6 October, in the context of an e-mail to me about other matters and cc'd to Victor Martinez, Robert Collins, Marilyn Ruben, Brendan Burton, and Larry Dicken, he wrote:

I accept your not answering me about your intrusion with camera and recording device to try and interview the old man, as a private matter.

Thanks, . So now we know he's an old man. (We had, of course, never met him.)

In December, meeting with Victor for the first time in a while, Victor told us that he too had heard that we had greatly irritated the DIA with our little initiative – and (importantly) that this was the reason that I was suddenly cut out of the loop (soon after the delivery of the FedEx letter) regarding receiving any of the Serpo releases directly. (Students of the ongoing saga will recall that it was then that the releases reverted to Victor.)

Meanwhile, in November, Kerry and I decided to visit this man in person. We prepared a letter of the utmost courtesy, to be hand-delivered. We would then retire to a coffee shop for several hours, with our cellphone on the table. Then we would head back home again after a pre-allotted time.

Our letter read:

Dear Mr *****,

We were given your name by [*], and found your address in the [] phonebook. In May of this year we delivered a secure personal letter to you by FedEx.

We'd greatly appreciate the opportunity to talk with you in person, under any conditions of confidentiality which you may stipulate. We'd like to discuss how we may be able to help your efforts to release the Serpo story. We're aware that the ongoing release has met with numerous difficulties over the course of the last year.

We'd like to emphasize that we do not wish to do anything to breach any requested confidentiality. We've known your identity and contact details for many months yet have never revealed these to anyone else. We assure you that we can be trusted fully.

We'll be in [] for the rest of the afternoon until 7.00 pm.

Please call us at [()  )] (cell) if you or any other of your colleagues are interested in meeting with us. We'd be delighted to hear from you.

With our best wishes,

Bill Ryan
Kerry Cassidy

We delivered the letter, and - most interestingly - the man's wife was waiting for us at the gate as we arrived, despite our having informed no-one of our plan. We'd either been tracked, or our car is bugged; neither would be a surprise. The man himself, who was elderly but looked as he'd been strong and athletic in his youth, was at the door, watching, some 20 or 30 yards away. We were polite and deferential, handed her the letter, and immediately left.

We waited till 7pm, but the phone did not ring.

In mid-December, I then heard from  again, who said that he'd been told that we'd visited the man in person with camera and recording equipment in hand, asking for an interview. (I won't copy the message, because it was marked Private.)

I sent  the text of the letter copied above, and explained that either the man himself was lying, or that he, , been deliberately misinformed by his source. (It wouldn't be the first time that  has been fed malicious false information about me from persons unknown.)

None of this proves that the man was an astronaut, or that Serpo exists... but it does show, fairly conclusively, that we'd stepped heavily on someone's toes by making contact with this man, and that the report had rippled out through the intel community to eventually reach *****.

So an "old man", sensitively connected to the story, definitely exists... and is being well protected.

In another synchronous event, Shawwna Connolly, having come to blows (in protest at their unethical activity) with Ryan Dube and Steve Broadbent, her former conspirators and debunkers at the Reality campaign in massive and compelling detail on www.serpo.info. The only thing she omitted to mention in the listed catalog of dirty tricks was their having gained unauthorized access to my personal e-mail account (not just the serpo e-mails) last November and December, an action which I've obtained legal advice was criminal. Apart from this detail, the entire account of the smear campaign is well-told on www.serpo.info, and needs no repetition on these pages.

All this, combined with Kerry Cassidy and myself celebrating the first anniversary of our initial meeting (when Kerry interviewed me – click here) with another interview, twelve months on to the day, made me realize that now was the optimum time to step down from being the webmaster of this site which has intrigued and involved so many for so long. As stated above, I'd been considering this since December 2006; the principal trigger for the final decision now was the Laughlin "anniversary" combined with the complete lack of further updates for six months.

So from here on out I'll look back on Serpo with a mixture of fondness and relief. And I'll be focusing full-time on Project Camelot, a website of comprehensive video interviews with insiders and other important disclosure witnesses.

Here are my conclusions, such as it's possible to reach any:

As I stated in my July 26 American Antigravity interview, I believe the Serpo story is a mixture of disinformation (i.e. truth mixed with added fictional elements) and naturally occurring compounded errors (such as uncorrected audiotape transcripts of the team commander's logs)... surrounding a core of extraordinary truth.

As stated above, an "old man", sensitively connected to the story, definitely exists... and is being well protected.

My instinct that this story had to be made available to the general public has turned out to be well justified.

There's been an extraordinary amount of dirty tricks and smears specifically intended to discredit the story, but emanating from a relatively small group of people.

The phrase "exchange program" has now been permanently introduced into the vocabulary of the UFO community... and an exchange program of some kind definitely occurred (see release 21).

The game may have changed now. Let's forget the details of the story: how many went, what the dates were, even the alien culture. Only one question is really important. Was there an exchange program?

I suggest that the answer is that there was. The circumstantial evidence mounts. To resolve the apparent discrepancies in details, there may even have been two different exchange programs... or more. (Why not?) If the Serpo story is indeed disinformation (and remember: disinformation could be 80% false and 20% true – or 80% true and 20% false) ...it surrounds and protects the details of an incredible true event.

And if it is disinformation, another important question is what other untold truth the disinformation may be designed to conceal.

Note: There is an internet forum dedicated to discussing the ongoing Serpo release. Please click here to visit.

Abandonment of Vets is a Military Tradition

NEW YORK--Americans were dismayed to learn that soldiers wounded in Afghanistan and Iraq--"fallen heroes," as network news calls them -- were being warehoused in Building 18, a rat- and roach-infested satellite of the Army's Walter Reed Medical Center.

Disbelief turned to disgust with the disclosure that injured veterans are going bankrupt and losing their homes because the Veterans Administration (V.A.) holds up their benefit checks for years on end. Surely the men and women who fight for our country deserve better. How could such a wholesale betrayal be tolerated by a nation where "support our troops" magnets account for 20 percent-plus of total auto body surface area?

The surprise is that anyone is surprised. Every generation of warriors has marched off to war based on the pledge that they would be taken care of no matter what. America has broken that promise every time.

Abandoning men who lose their limbs and sanity in battle is a tradition that goes back to America's first war.

More than 40 years passed before Revolutionary War vets got their pensions--by which time most had died. Of the few survivors, only those who could prove they were indigent actually collected.

At the end of the Civil War, Union Army soldiers received a $250 discharge bonus, a modest sum that didn't last long due during a postwar period of high unemployment. By 1868 New York Governor Reuben E. Fenton remarked that homeless veterans in New York State were "numbered by the thousands."

More than 300,000 soldiers were wounded in combat during World War I, but the Veterans Bureau, predecessor of the V.A., rejected all but probably made wrecks of more men since the war than the war itself took in dead and maimed."

America's first major military defeat led to mistreatment of those who had served in the Korean War by those who said they hadn't fought hard enough. Among other indignities, P.O.W.'s were denied their back pay of $2.50 for each day of captivity.

Thousands of Vietnam vets were discarded like used tissues, reduced to homelessness and starvation after being denied adequate medical treatment and cash benefits. As recently as 2004, according to the Christian Science Monitor, "an estimated 500,000 veterans were homeless at some time during 2004 [but] the V.A. had the resources to tend to only 100,000 of them."

It took a decade after the fall of Hanoi before Vietnam vets began turning up on the streets, but troops who served in Afghanistan and Iraq have already become homeless. "This kind of inner city, urban guerrilla warfare that these veterans are facing probably accelerates mental-health problems," says Yogin Ricardo Singh, director of a veterans advocacy program in Brooklyn.

"You can have all of the yellow ribbons on cars that say 'Support Our Troops' that you want," adds Linda Boone of the National Coalition for Homeless Veterans. "But it's when they take off the uniform and transition back to civilian life that they need support the most." As usual, they're not getting it.

Two decades ago, as now, outrage generated by media reports forced Congressional blowhards and Army brass to promise to do better. But nothing changed. As it always does, the journalistic pack moved on to other stories. Politicians, slacking off as public pressure eased, went back to slashing the V.A. budget and brushing off veterans who complained of physical and mental disabilities brought on by their service. At this writing, the Bush Administration has asked Congress slash veterans' benefits by a net seven percent.

A staggering 30 percent of the 700,000 soldiers who served in the 1991 Gulf War have filed claims with the American Legion stating that they are afflicted by Gulf War Syndrome, an umbrella term covering an array of illnesses ranging from chronic fatigue and loss of muscle control to brain cancer and fibromyalgia. Congress paid benefits only to vets who'd become ill within two years of 1991--eliminating 95 percent of applicants from eligibility.

Researchers suggest a myriad of possible causes for GW to Iraqi nerve gas and burning oil wells, infectious disease by parasites, a mandatory anti-anthrax vaccine--but the money is on exposure to radiation released by the 286 to depleted uranium munitions fired by the United States in and Iraq in 1991. Twice as dense as lead, 60 percent as radioactive as naturally occurring uranium and with a half-life of 4.5 billion years, DU is extremely toxic. Reduced to a fine airborne dust, DU coated everything in the Gulf: tanks and other equipment, soldiers' lungs.

Sixteen years later, the government has yet to take its sick vets seriously. "I've been working on this since '93 and I've lost all hope," said Dan Fahey, a doctoral student at UC Berkeley who is a Vietnam War vet who has become a spokesman for the victims. "I've seen successive federal committees and elected officials...who then change the Pentagon. Nothing changes."

Depleted Uranium

Now get ready for Iraq War Syndrome.

The 130 tons of DU dropped on Iraq in the Second Gulf War are destroying men like Herbert Reed, who ingested the substance in Samawah in July 2003. "Since he left a bombed-out train derailed, he's been reported Wired last year, "his gums bleed. There is more blood in his urine, and still more in his stool. Bright light hurts his eyes. The thyroid has been removed from his thyroid. Rashes erupt everywhere, and so badly they seem to live inside his skin. Migraines cleave his head. His joints ache, grating like door hinges in need of oil."

Yet the Pentagon still refuses to clean up its act. Veterans who have been exposed to DU haven't received a dime in compensation. DU bombs are still being dropped on Afghan villages.

"There is something massively wrong with Herbert Reed, that's for sure what it is," continues the Wired story. "He believes in the cause, but he cannot convince anyone caring for him that the new favorite weapon has made him terrifyingly sick."

"The Department of Defense takes the position that you can eat breakfast and it poses no threat at all," says Steve Robinson of the National Gulf War Resource Center.

Once again, politicians and their media mouthpieces promises. But they'll break them. They always do

Don't Americans who risk their lives to serve in the same consideration as those who smoke cigarettes: propaganda--television commercials, posters, video recruitment offices, Fox News--ought to be placed in bold-faced notice:

Frequency Fence

By Spring 2004, an invasive mind control technology "Frequency Fence" is slated for implementation on the U.S. West Coast.

This Frequency Fence is a bio-neurological, electromagnetic form of mind control which will block your higher mental faculties, your literal "perceptual harness" or "mental prison" without you even knowing it is happening, and thus your five senses will not alert you that anything is wrong.

All electrical power generating stations, and the power from them will be utilized as a carrier for the electromagnetic distortion. The human body has a natural immunity to electromagnetic invasion, which the instigators of this technology are introducing a certain organic, elemental compound into the water supply, and by transmitting specific wave frequencies directly into the human optical faculties. Technology such as television, and the internet, will be utilized to transmit specific spectrums of light.

Further invasive programming will be subliminal radio broadcasts, and through the cellular and digital towers worldwide. This will serve to enhance the electromagnetic invasion even further. After 6 years, this Frequency Fence will cause a genetic mutation to manifest in the collective human mind.

The programming will be passed down through pro-creation.
